The Guy Who Makes a Mock of Democracy

Hell Gate Bridge, left. German saboteurs were told it was an important transportation point in NY: it carried the main traffic from the north. See ch. 5. Targets in America were more than looked over by the Axis as Americans entered defense plants.

After the invasion of North Africa, the U.S. Army realized that the intensity of combat operations was more than they bargained for, and so during the winter of 1942-43, word began to get out that Japanese-Americans could volunteer for combat, if enough volunteers volunteered. They did. Initially, over 10,000 men were loyal, and patriotic (part of the volunteers on your left) and were put to the test after 1942; the brave actions are in my 7th vol.

Beware the Man Who Makes a Fortune in a Flood!

Military District of Washington

11th Air Force Northern Pacific

In a cartoon by Dr. Seuss (April 8, 1942) those who make profits at the expense of common Americans ARE A BIG NEGATIVE. In this case, the umbrella salesman is happily ringing up his profits to people stranded in a flood. Note the swastika, the cause of the flood. The safety of children was very important on the Home Front. Key themes: survival, survival. The future of America depends on you. Nylon was rationed because they needed lots of nylon for parachutes.
